

National Recognition of the Transportation and Logistics Management Major

The American Society of Transportation and Logistics (AST&L) will grant graduates of the University of Wisconsin-Superior's Transportation and Logistics Management major the designation of Certified in Transportation and Logistics (CTL). The AST&L's board of examiners have reviewed the curriculum, courses and internship program of UW-Superior's Transportation and Logistics Management program and determined that it meets all the requirements for CTL designation. Graduates with membership in the prestigious AST&L will be able to append the CTL designation to their name.

The American Society of Transportation and Logistics was formed in 1947 and in 1970 established the program of extensive exams and a written creative project that leads to awarding the CTL designation which is now recognized throughout the U.S. and Asia. The Professional Certification Program of the Society attests to a certain level of attainment in transportation economics, traffic management, management tools and concepts, transportation law and regulation; international transportation and logistics and systems analysis. The professional society has a code of ethics, hosts seminars, workshops and forums, awards scholarships, and publishes the "Transportation JournalTM". The Society also selects an individual for the Outstanding Transportation/Logistics Executive in North America Award of Excellence. There are 4 chapters of the AST&L located throughout North America with student chapters at several universities. Chapters continue to develop in the U.S. and internationally.
