THE SOCIAL INQUIRY DEPARTMENT

Programs in the Social Inquiry department:

• Form the basis of a sound university education.
• Prepare students for careers.
• Help students better understand themselves.
• Give students a better understanding of the world.

Within the Social Inquiry department, the Anthropology minor provides students with resources and opportunities to explore the range of human experience and issues of human diversity. The Anthropology minor is a great fit to pair with majors such as:

• History
• Sociology
• Business Administration
• Psychology
• Social Work
• Communications

THE ANTHROPOLOGY MINOR

Anthropology looks at the range of human adaptation and experience in relation to culture, language, physical application, evolution and application to problems. The Anthropology program includes all of this with a focus on understanding. Anthropology students will study:

• Consumer Behavior
• Workplace Cultures
• Diversity in Child Development
• How Groups Deal with Illness
• Ways to Address Conflicts
• Youth Subcultures
• Ethnic Identity
• Social Change

Along with a diverse selection of courses, students engage in hands-on experiences by doing research projects and traveling the world through UW-Superior’s Study Away programs.

DEGREE POSSIBILITIES

An Anthropology minor is useful in any career field. In today’s globalized, diverse world and marketplace, businesses need graduates who understand culture and diversity. According to the U.S. Department of Labor, the median income is over $50,000 for careers in Anthropology and in professional fields such as:

• Archivist
• Curator
• Economist
• Geographer
• Psychologist
• Sociologist
• Survey Researcher
