The ability to speak, read, write, and understand a foreign language is an excellent complement to virtually any major. Employers, such as the U.S. Department of State and international companies, expect competency in a foreign language and global cultures. Moreover, learning French is an essential asset for a well-prepared job candidate seeking to establish a professional career.

UW-Superior’s French program introduces students to French language and culture and offers both a Liberal Arts French Minor and a French Teaching Minor. It seeks to educate students to become better global citizens by promoting awareness and sensitivity to all Francophone cultures. Moreover, learning French has always been one of the principal donors of foreign words to English, which simplifies learning French.

Find out more about UW-Superior’s French program online at uwsuper.edu/acaddept/wllc.

The French Program is taught by Dr. Virginia R. Donovan, who has studied at University Laval in Quebec, presented papers at national and international conferences, and published on various aspects of French/Francophone language and culture. Courses are offered in beginning through advanced French focusing on literature, culture, civilization, and business.

Students may also pursue French studies through study abroad programs, such as at University of Le Havre in northern France, where UW-Superior has established a partnership.
