The Math & Computer Science Department

UW-Superior’s Department of Mathematics and Computer Science programs provide a core of fundamental courses along with an array of electives, enabling students to pursue special interests. With this versatile, highly regarded program, students are prepared for a career after graduation or graduate studies.

The Mathematics Program

The Mathematics major prepares students for careers in mathematics, science and research, or for graduate study. The Mathematics major with the Discrete Applied Mathematics Concentration provides students with the tools used in many everyday activities in science and industry. For example, computer science uses discrete mathematics methods extensively to find more efficient solutions to problems.

This major offers exciting courses for those interested in mathematics and computers. Students work with an advisor in the department to enroll in courses that best prepare them for actuarial science. The Mathematics major pairs well with the following programs to further expand your career possibilities:

- Computer Science
- Biology
- Accounting
- Finance
- Business Administration

To help meet the continued demand for mathematics teachers, UW-Superior offers the Mathematics Education major. Students who complete this major meet the teacher certification requirements for Wisconsin.

Degree Possibilities

Majoring in mathematics or computer science opens the door to a wide range of careers in:

- Finance
- Teaching
- Applied Mathematics
- Biomathematics
- Public Policy
- Operations Research
- Computer Science

Graduates also are well prepared to seek advanced degrees in graduate school. With continued technology growth, people who have a strong mathematics background or knowledge of computers will be able to find employment in an almost endless list of career fields.
