THE PSYCHOLOGY PROGRAM

The Psychology program at the University of Wisconsin-Superior prepares students for advanced study in psychology and related disciplines within the context of a public liberal arts education. Our graduates have gone on to be successful in master’s and doctoral programs in:

• Psychology
• Social Work
• Counseling
• Law
• Medicine

A liberal arts education means that your coursework will emphasize broad themes such as:

• Developing critical thinking skills
• Understanding diversity
• Attending to global issues
• Providing service to the local community

Students will gain effective written and oral communication skills and learn how to interpret, design, implement and share results from research projects. Students will also learn how to understand human behavior, as well as develop skills for analysis and thinking critically about claims regarding human behavior presented in the media.

Students gain hands-on experience through research projects and Academic Service-Learning (AS-L). Each year an undergraduate research symposium provides an opportunity for senior psychology majors to present their projects. Psychology clubs Inkblots and Psi Chi give students additional ways to gain experience in the field and make connections.

DEGREE POSSIBILITIES

A major in psychology can be used as background for a wide range of careers in:

• Industry
• Education
• Community services
• Counseling
• Non-profit organizations
• Business management
• Gerontology

Some students combine a Psychology major with another major or minor to pursue jobs in specialized areas such as industrial psychology. Other students seek entry-level jobs in psychology-related professions or earn advanced degrees to become clinical psychologists or school psychologists.
