

Pre-Law

Course of Study

Health & Human Performance Department

If law school is in your future plans, UW-Superior offers quality pre-law options and provides excellent support and resources for students seeking entry into law school. Pre-law students can declare any major and apply to law school. However, legal studies is one of the most common majors that students pursue because it provides a premier experience directly with law and justice.

Why pursue pre-law at UW-Superior?

- Opportunities to participate in field internships with legal professionals, the courts and public service organizations in the region
- Students may choose to join the nationally recognized mock trial team, an academic forensic competitive student organization on campus
- Direct facilitation of the admissions process for American law schools by UW-Superior's LSAC Pre-Law Advisor
- Active pre-law society that hosts guest speakers from the legal community
- Personal guidance on preparing materials for law school admission
- One-on-one academic advising each step of the way toward a successful legal career

Where do pre-law students go?

UW-Superior has a 95-percent placement rate for students seeking entry into law school. Of the students who choose to attend law school, they have a 97-percent completion rate. They are often successful in the first year of law school due to their extensive undergraduate preparation at UW-Superior.

UW-Superior pre-law graduates have been accepted to and continued their education at:

- Mitchell-Hamline School of Law
- University of Minnesota Law School

- University of North Dakota School of Law
- University of St. Thomas School of Law
- University of Wisconsin-Madison Law School
- And many more

Graduates find jobs in many law-related fields such as:

- Attorney
- Court administrator
- Court clerk
- FBI agent
- Government relations director
- Investigator
- Legal consultant
- Legal journalist
- Lobbyist
- Mediator
- Paralegal
- Police officer
- Probation officer
- Social worker

For more information, visit uwsuper.edu/prelaw

