

Special Education

UW-Superior's Master of Science in Education – Special Education degree program is designed for individuals who wish to pursue graduate work in the field of Special Education.

Program Options

The MSE-Special Education degree is for those who want to increase their knowledge about special education and improve their skills in working with individuals who have special needs. This option is designed for adults who work collaboratively with special education professionals such as community members, parents, educators, and other advocates.

The MSE-Special Education degree with Certification for Licensure is designed for licensed educators who want to work directly with students who have special needs. It prepares educators for collaborating with other professionals and for working in educational settings. A post-baccalaureate option is available for students to pursue licensing in special education. Sixteen to 22 graduate credits are available for this option.

Convenience

The MSE-Special Education program is designed with professionals' schedules in mind. Students can complete both degree options in as little as two years. Classes are offered weekday evenings and many courses are offered online. Up to nine credits of graduate work from other campuses may be transferred to UW-Superior and up to nine credits may be taken before enrolling in the master's program. On campus courses may be accessed via ITV in a variety of locations.

Format

Coursework includes a variety of classroom and online work. Students seeking certification for licensure will do fieldwork; degree-seeking students will complete an action research project.

Faculty

Students in the MSE-Special Education program enjoy face-to-face, personalized advisement with professors who know them by name and who have significant experience working with individuals who have disabilities.

Facilities

The program is housed in Swenson Hall where students enjoy access to state-of-the-art classrooms with modern technology and inviting work and common areas that enhance the overall learning experience.

Program Highlights
